With special thanks to the National Foundation for Advancement in the Arts (NFAA) for helping thousands of young artists, including me, realize and pursue our dreams. NFAA has been a personal “Hero” for me, beginning with my once-in-a-lifetime experience with ARTS Week in Miami, which gave me the confidence to pursue a career in the arts, and culminating at the White House, where I was recognized as an NFAA 1983 Presidential Scholar in the Arts under President Ronald Reagan. I feel very fortunate to be among the many young artists who NFAA has helped to identify, encourage and reward at critical junctures in our educational and professional development.

—Kevin Berlin, New York City, 2005

Headquartered in Miami, Florida, NFAA is a diverse gathering of individuals, corporations, foundations and philanthropic institutions that believe America’s youth are its future. This year, NFAA celebrates its 25th anniversary as an organization dedicated to furthering artists and raising appreciation for, and support of, the arts in American society. NFAA’s programs recognize all art forms, annually granting over $500,000 in direct cash awards and making available an additional $3 million in college scholarship opportunities to young artists across America.

NFAA also encourages artistic growth and career development through cash awards, college scholarships, workshops, public performances and exhibitions, internships and the underwriting of creative projects and residency fellowships, which all serve as springboards for the development of successful careers in the fields of dance, film & video, jazz and instrumental classical music, photography, theater, visual arts, voice and writing.
